MR. HINDS COUNTY A.H.S., Darryl Jenkins

MISS HINDS COUNTY A.H.S., Pamela Gregory

Lisa Gilmore contemplates her assignment.

As one school year ends and another begins, in retrospect, we try to capture many cherished moments which gradually fade from our minds. The various modes of student education and activities center upon a profound structured learning program as well as spontaneous and informal pursuits.

The HINDSONIAN, an essay in pictures, ventures to preserve many of the good and bad events of the past year. It helps to recall some of the special moments that will forever remain a part of our lives.

Somewhere between striving for a high school education and looking forward to a successful adulthood, we encounter an unforgettable group of beings known as the Hinds County Agricultural High School students. This book portrays some of the varied abilities and talents possessed by the students.

We hope that the 1985 HINDSONIAN will serve as a liaison between the trivial and important aspects of the scholastic year.

Darryl hands down a judgment on a crucial case.

Can this be Calvin Hodge?

Lanette Carter keeps her eyes on the copy.

EDITOR'S MESSAGE

It all started August 21, 1984. Students stepped off the buses enthusiastically awaiting the start of a new school year. We knew that the 1984-85 school term had a lot in store for us.

This year meant many long hours of work for many of us and for all teachers. Not only did the teachers spend long hours working on the Aim plan, but also long hours working in the classroom. It paid off because we were inspired, we were motivated, we were enlightened, and we were endowed with values never before learned.

As the year unfolded and went about its way to bring us academic, social, and aesthetic rewards; there was a certain atmosphere that pervaded everywhere. It was one of school spirit and pride. Homecoming pep rallies, games, and other events told our story. It was a story quite distinguished from others.

We have sought to show our actions and qualities in aspects that have characterized our extraordinary yet conventional school year. It was a year of much excitement and challenge which revealed "The Way We Were."
